Disablement Fund

The Disablement fund which has started under the auspices of the military hospital commission, of which Senator Longford is president, has come into being. James Carleton, the millionaire grain man having given $100,000 as well as other contributions which have been received.

The name of the commission in undertaking the raising of a national fund for disabled or disabled soldiers was explained in a recent statement given out by the secretary. The commission will have a number of activities, among which will be the establishing and maintenance of hospitals and convalescent homes, the organization of voluntary aid and the administration of a disbursement fund. A large number of private houses have been offered, many of which are likely to be equipped as military convalescent homes.

In view of the fact that the pensions will be insufficient in many cases, a fund the Military Hospitals Commission Disbursement Fund, has been established, the principal objects of which will be:

- (1) To supplement the pension which is insufficient for the support of dependents.
- (2) To educate and train those made unable to follow their previous vocation in other lines of industry and to supplement their earnings during the period of training.
- (3) To assist those totally incapacitated either by the execution of permanent home or by injury hereafter determined.
- (4) Generally to take such steps as may be deemed necessary to carry out the duty of the Canadian people to the men who have suffered in the defense of our liberties.

Give Sam a Chance

With the Hon. Sam Hughes, the greatest military commander and driving force of all time since the days of Hamilton at British headquarters in London, telling Lord Kitchener and the coalition cabinet how the war should be conducted, it is a matter for great surprise that the Tenth Army have not yet been shipped off the map. Surely the Hon. Sam Hughes, good right hand, has not lost his cunning. We confess "disappointment." We had expected greater things of a man of his superhuman and superhuman powers. But it may be that he is handicapped by British military traditions and has not had a fair chance to exercise his energy. We feel certain that if given a free hand, he would unseat his own grand, his patient, should with the hole in H. Kitchener's head, and start a Bittert inner, call his man Turpin to his side, have a few nurses in Mikado uniform in attendance to his sitting at least six help strengtheners, and start immediately a triumphal and anti-entertained march to Berlin. He has performed another great feat, and, for the first time, should be not be asked to repeat. In South Africa, according to his own story, he, almost single-handed, captured a whole force, commanded, and kept them overnight. The fact that they all escaped before sunrise is a mere detail which should not diminish the glory of the famous single-handed capture. We hope Lord Kitchener is not actuated by jealousy, and that he will give Sam his chance.

Geo. Meikle.

Eleven degrees of frost on Sunday put an end to the flower gardens. The frost was accompanied by about one inch of snow. In looking over our diary we find that at the same date last year we had a fall of eight inches of snow.

Booze in Vernon

The camping of the soldiers in Vernon has been a great boon to the gin mills of that city. The receipts of some bars run into hundreds of dollars a day. At certain times of the day the bars are filled with soldiers, thicker than flow around a job of spilled sugar, all clamoring for booze, and getting their money down on the bar like white chips in a live-stock poker game. A Vernon bar in the early evening has got, with the exception of the shooting, the Arizona saloons of the early days slanted to a sloopy drink. Although they are all gunned none of the boys in khaki have as yet led a far top, or shot the light out. Vernon whiskey must be more superlative than militancy. It is one of the great sights of those days of war to see a Vernon barroom in action. Every two feet, entrenched behind a long breakfast of unbagged bread the noble, resolute and determined bartenders, prepared to do until overcome by gas. Eagerly the Canadians leap into action, every man yearning to do his two bits towards putting down the enemy. The compact is terrible and the spectacle bizarre. Shots are exchanged with great rapidity, and several soldiers are sunk every second. Great volleys of silver are fired at the courageous bartenders, but, amid all the shock and smoke, you can hear the steady rattle of the Scotch, and the constant falling of the "dead marines" upon the floor. If the brave 4th can fight the German as well as it does the Irish, the corn and his allies, we will have Sam's brother, the Kaiser, in luck, before the end of Indian summer—Greenwood Lodge.

The Response

Britain desired neither conquest nor glory. The real gains of war had no worthier eyes. But a tyrant arose, and a weak nation suffered. And Britain gave heed to her progeny and her sighs. For her charter states plainly the weak shall not suffer. And she in her power stand lily-bellied. The war dogs were loosened, and she, as a message was sent, to him, far and wide.

CHORUS:

Then from all her wide-flung bays
Britain's sons made this reply
We stand for faith and freedom, for the deed we'll serve or die.
We'll daily not nor shrink for duty's call
We're asking not for glory, and we're loving what we do.
Then good-bye to homeland, and good-bye to friend.
'Tis a grim road to follow, but we'll follow to the end.

The world was unconquered by dark clouds of sorrow.
The nations strain vainly the war-dogs to chain.
Then angle eels somnolent and three nations in a marsh.
Their harvest and lost from the mart and the plain.
First hand-to-hand, together the weak one they'll smother.
For freedom and faith they will never divide.
The Allies are marching, and Britain is with them.
Hear the message that comes from her sons, far and wide.

—Miss Miriam Elston.
